Our Auxiliary has a long and strong connection to health care

Quality local health care and the West Parry Sound Health Centre Auxiliary share a long history together. While Dr. Stone’s first hospital in Parry Sound had an auxiliary to support it, it was not in continuous operation until today’s group was formed in 1927 at what would later become the health centre’s James Street site.

While the important tradition of hands-on handicraft has not been abandoned, the ladies have come a long way since making bandages and sewing diapers. Men are now active and equal members in the organization, and Auxiliary volunteers serve an important role in the daily life of our modern health care facility.

The Auxiliary enjoys a very prominent place within the organization. Just inside the main entrance they operate the Whispering Pines Gift Shop, a place where modern retailing practices are put to work, and just around the corner Hava Java is a popular coffee stop for staff and visitors.

The health centre’s staff and medical community share a common history with the Auxiliary. Every day, unbroken since 1927, there have been Auxiliary members supporting patient care and helping to improve services inside our hospital.

That is a proud tradition to be a part of.
